

Predicting flower colour from environment (n = 1,174 species, 338 genera)

Colour–environment associations are statistically robust but weakly predictive: the best environment model reaches balanced accuracy 0.342 against a 0.333 chance floor. Knowing a species' genus predicts colour roughly three times better than its entire climate and soil niche, and PC2 is the only informative axis — independently reproducing the MCMCglmm result.